SUBMARINE F-4 IS BROUGHT TO SURFACE AFTER FIVE MONTHS

Ill-Fated Craft Will be Placed in Drydock and Inspected.

PROVED A TOMB FOR 22 MEN

Commander and 21 of Crew Perished When Submersible Went Down During Maneuvers of the [illegible] Fleet; Department Called Craft Seaworthy.

By Associated Press.

HONOLULU, Aug. 30.—Work preliminary to the drydocking of the submarine F-4, lost in the Honolulu harbor with [illegible] men March [illegible], and raised yesterday, was under way today. It was expected the craft would be placed in drydock tomorrow. Until then nothing definite can be announced as to what caused the disaster.

The F-4 was raised by the pontoon method, six special pontoons, each with a lifting capacity of [illegible] tons, having been constructed for the purpose after all other methods proved unavailable.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—The submarine F-4, commanded by Lieutenant Alfred L. Ede and a crew of 21 men, went to the bottom of the harbor of Honolulu March 25, 1915, during maneuvers of the [illegible] squadron. She was located two days later and Diver John Agraz of the navy descended [illegible] feet, establishing a new world record, in an effort to facilitate the work of bringing her to the surface. Her crew, it was said, might have been alive at this time. [illegible] attempts at rescue failed, and on March [illegible] Rear Admiral C. B. Moore, commanding the Honolulu naval station, reported that the F-4 lay in [illegible] feet of water and would have to be raised by pontoons.

Secretary Daniels announced that the F-4 would be raised at any cost in order to determine the cause of the accident, and diving apparatus and divers were sent out. One of the divers, Frank Crilly, went down [illegible] feet and found one of the compartments of the F-4 filled with water. Another, William F. Loughman, [illegible] a [illegible] foot the next day and was seriously injured by water pressure. These men put lines on the F-4, by which the boat was dragged slowly up the shelving bottom, but by the [illegible] the [illegible] was wrecked and broken and work was halted to await the arrival of pontoons. A scow capable of lifting sixty tons each was sent from Mare Island navy yard in August.

At the time of the accident reports gained circulation that the F-4 was not in [illegible] shape when she went to the water. These were officially denied.

ENGLISH POUNDS LOWER.

Shipments of Gold Fail to Stem Downward Course.

By Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—Twenty million dollars of English gold and $[illegible] in American securities [illegible] hastily shipped to New York [illegible] Great Britain to stem the downward course of the English pound sterling to new depths of depreciation [illegible] failed today to accomplish that [illegible] and a new low valuation of $[illegible] was placed on the English pound in the face of the [illegible] shipment.

This is [illegible] cents less than the normal value of the pound in this market and established a new low record for the fourth consecutive business day.

TESTIMONY IS TAKEN IN FIGHT OVER HURLEY WILL

Witnesses Declare That Connellsville Man Was of Sound Mind When He Made Document.

Special to The Courier.

UNIONTOWN, Aug. 30.—Testimony was taken before [illegible] this morning in the appeal of Mrs. [illegible] and Mrs. [illegible] Hellen from the action of the register of wills in admitting the last will and testament of Michael Hurley, late of Connellsville, to probate. The appellants maintain that at the time of making the will Mr. Hurley was of unsound mind and in no position of making a valid will.

Testimony taken before Judge Work embodied this contention. Four witnesses were called: J. H. Kurtz, James H. Scott, [illegible] Kirk [illegible] and Father J. J. Hunn. Other witnesses are also to be examined.

All four of those who took the stand declared their belief that Mr. Hurley was fully capable of making a will. Mr. Kurtz, who drew up the majority of Mr. Hurley's papers, declared that no man in Connellsville knew more about his own affairs than did Mr. Hurley. Similar testimony was given by the others.

Mr. Hurley died February 17, 191[illegible]. His will was made April 7, 1911, and there were codicils added on October [illegible] 1911 and August 10, 1914. On the [illegible] of the last codicil Mr. Hurley was bedfast and his condition was considered serious. Witnesses testified that while he was weak and apparently seriously ill his mind did not seem to be impaired.

WEST HAS COOL WAVE

Abnormally Low Temperatures Are Reported.

By Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—Abnormally low temperatures prevailed today over the upper Mississippi and lower Missouri river valleys and the upper lake regions. In some places the Weather Bureau report [illegible] the thermometer showed temperatures which broke records for the month of August.

Frosts were reported in many places. In some instances they were heavy and [illegible] considerable damage to crops.

Over almost all of the section frost [illegible] temperatures were from 10 to 23 degrees below the seasonal average. The cold came down from the Canadian Northwest and will spread tonight eastward, reaching the Atlantic seaboard tomorrow. Frost was predicted as probable tonight in Michigan, Indiana and Ohio.

WAUSAU, Wis., Aug. 30.—Damage estimated at between $[illegible] and $10,000 was [illegible] to late potatoes and [illegible] through Marathon county last night by a killing frost. The corn crop also suffered heavily.

COUNCIL WILL MEET

Important Matters Are Scheduled for Consideration By Body.

Council will meet in special session tonight. Besides the introduction of ordinances necessary for the city's bookkeeping which were defeated at the last meeting, consideration of the garbage collection matter is scheduled. The Connellsville Garbage company served notice two weeks ago that it would discontinue [illegible] in the city on August 31 if council did not take steps to readjust rates for collection.

No action was taken on this notice at the last meeting, so it is inferred that council has some new solution of the garbage matter ready to submit for action. It is rumored that this may eliminate the garbage company entirely.

MAY END BIG RUSSIAN CAMPAIGN

Military Critics Expect New Offensive Will be Launched by the Central Powers Probably in the Near East; Heavy Artillery Fire in West.

By Associated Press.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Reports from the eastern front indicating that the Austrians and Germans are engaged in an effort to clear the last corner of Galicia still held by the Russian armies have excited great interest here. The Russian line on the upper Bug and the Zlota Lipa has been pierced, but it is not yet clear how serious a resistance is being offered to the vast enveloping movement from the south.

Having lost Brest-Litovsk, Grand Duke Nicholas cannot afford to hold the river positions in the south in the face of an important movement for to do so would endanger his armies.

The opinion is expressed by some English critics that this latest move may be [illegible] for the present the great effort against the Russians which has been in progress since May, and that one Austrian soldier is heard of the invasion [illegible] may be undertaken by the Teutonic [illegible] this time in the Near East. In support of this theory is [illegible] the report that the Central Powers are massing troops near the Roumanian border.

The west end witnesses violent and almost continual activity on the part of the artillery of the allies all the way from the North sea to the Vosges. There are no infantry attacks, however, that this expenditure of munitions is followed by infantry attacks.

London is again awaiting official reports from the British or French authorities concerning the campaign at the Dardanelles which according to reports from Constantinople heavy fighting is again under way.

ESCAPED AVIATOR IS RETURNED TO SWITZERLAND

PARIS, Aug. 30.—Eugene Gilbert, the French aviator whose return to Switzerland after his escape from internment in that country was ordered by the French Government, arrived in Berne yesterday escorted by Captain Duff of the Swiss army, according to a dispatch today from Berne.

The aviator whose recent escape was said to have been effected after he had withdrawn his promise not to try to get away was received by the Swiss staff and informed that he was considered as an officer interned without without having given his word of honor. Gilbert arrived this morning at the village of Hostenthal, where he was interned anew.

All the Swiss papers, the dispatch states, declared that most excellent impression has been created in Switzerland by the return of Gilbert. It has developed that Gilbert had written a letter to the Swiss general staff withdrawing his promise that he would not make an escape. The letter was received several hours before the attempt was made but was left unopened at army headquarters and the general staff maintains that Gilbert had not been released from his word of honor.

FREIGHT TRAFFIC HEAVY OVER THE P. & L. E. LINES

August Makes Fine Showing After the July Recession.

DICKERSON RUN YARDS BUSY

Strict Inspection of Eastbound Western Maryland Trains as Safety First Precaution Is Now Being Handled Without Delay by Yardmen.

After a slight falling off in business during July traffic over the Pittsburg & Lake Erie railroad has again taken a jump forward. In June 20,606 cars were handled in the Dickerson Run yards, east and west, while in July only 0,023 were sent out, a decrease of "6" cars. This falling off in the number of cars moved was not due to a slump in freight business but to a new system of inspecting trains going east.

Some time ago an order was issued to car and air inspectors to allow no trains to leave the yards unless they were in perfect condition. Orders were also issued that all trains from Dickerson Run to Cumberland must be handled by air brakes and not by hand brakes. Part of the 22 mile hill which must be descended before entering Cumberland yard. These orders necessitated the hiring of 26 extra men to work on air and car inspection and considerable delay to trains was caused. The inspection work is now going on with all possible dispatch, the yardmen having proven as efficient as a number of experts sent in from outside to show how the work should be done.

The Dickerson Run yards were congested last week but on Saturday the yards were cleared and everything was moving on time. Large shipments of steel cars for the Russian government were sent through last week. Heavy shipments of limestone and manganese are coming in over the Western Maryland daily.

Last evening the fast freight over this road carried 29 cars of peaches in addition to the regular shipments. Shipments have more than doubled in the last two weeks it is said and the Monessen and Dickerson Run drag has been making two trips a day over the Whitsett cutoff. On the cutoff business has increased 62% over all other previous months.

All furloughed men have been given work again and new men are being hired. Improvements are still under way and it is expected to have the new main tracks put into commission about September 10. About 500 feet of 100 pound rails have yet to be laid. To accommodate the yard office force it is now planned to add a second story to the scale house, since all officials and clerks except the dispatchers have been moved there.

CIGAR STAND IS ROBBED OF $200 CASH AND A CHECK

WORKS QUICK AND DISAPPEARS

Proprietor Suspects Youth and Starts for Youngstown, Ohio, Where It Is Believed He Went; Gets Half an Hour's Start; Police at Work.

While Angelo DeFerri, clerk at the cigar stand at the West Penn Pool Room was away from his counter for a few minutes this morning, someone stole a sack containing about $200 in cash and a check for $[illegible] from a cupboard into which it had been placed for safe keeping until the bank opened.

A young man who stood in front of the counter reading a newspaper and who had seen DeFerri place the sack in the cupboard after changing a $5 bill is suspected of the theft. He had left the place when Angelo returned to the counter and he was seen later boarding a street car bound for Greensburg. He is believed to be heading for Youngstown, O., where he had previously been employed. John DeFerri, proprietor of the stand, left for Greensburg immediately upon the discovery of the robbery with the intention of heading the thief off.

The robbery was committed some time between 7:30 and 8 o'clock. It was about 7:30 when Angelo DeFerri brought the sack out to make change for a $5 bill. The youth now suspected of the robbery was standing in front of the counter reading a paper. The clerk remembers that he looked up as he took the change from the sack. Returning the money-bag to its hiding place in a little cupboard back of the counter Angelo waited on a few customers and then was called to the rear of the room. He was not gone long but on his return the youth had left. It was about 8 o'clock when the man in charge of the wiener stand outside came to the counter for money. Angelo reaching into the cupboard for the sack and found it had disappeared.

The police were notified at once and Chief Rowe soon had lines out to apprehend the suspect. Patrolman A. A. Geiker noticed the suspect hurrying up Main street about 8:30 o'clock and it is believed that he boarded the 9 o'clock car for Greensburg.

The bag represented the week's receipts of DeFerri's stand which he had brought down intending to deposit it in the bank as soon as it opened for the day's business. It was his custom to keep large sums in the cupboard and he had no thought of robbery. The cupboard was not locked.

She won encores with "Down Among the Sheltering Palms," "In the Garden of the Gods" and "If We Can't Be the Same Old Sweethearts Let Us Be the Same Old Friends."

Walter Rathmell, the band's trap-drummer, who is fast establishing a reputation as a singer of comedy songs, contributed several pleasing numbers.

The crowd that gathered at the park was well handled under direction of Superintendent of Transportation Daniel Durie of the West Penn.

BUOY IN RIVER

Oarsmen Erect Sign Which Puzzles Passersby on Bridge.

Much curiosity has been aroused in persons crossing the Yough bridge over a small sign stuck in the mud bank that has built itself at the mouth of the mill stream which has "danger" printed on it. The sign was put up by those owning boats on the river in order that they would not become stuck on the mud.

Some had figured out that it was a warning to bathers thinking it signalled a strong undertow at that point. Some thought it meant quicksands, and much curiosity was aroused until the real purpose of the board was learned.

PERRUS GETS MEDAL OF HONOR FOR WAR SERVICE

Local Greek Honored for His Distinguished Service in Turkish and Bulgarian Campaigns.

James Perrus, proprietor of several bootblack establishments in the city is the proud possessor of medals for particular bravery while serving in the Grecian army in its wars with Turkey and with Bulgaria. Mr. Perrus was too modest to boast about it and it was only by accident that a patron of his Main street stand discovered the fact this morning.

Picking up a Pittsburg paper the customer commented upon the fact that a Pittsburg Greek had received two medals for serving with honor in the two recent wars. Remembering that Perrus had served in the same war it was suggested that he might be entitled to similar recognition. Perrus modestly admitted that he had recently received two medals, a certificate of honorable discharge from the army and a picture of King Constantine.

One medal is suspended from a blue ribbon through which runs a red stripe, signifying that it is for service in the war against Turkey. It was in the battle of Janina on March 5, 1913, when the Greeks stormed and took a Turkish fort, that Perrus won this medal. The word Janina in Greek letters appears on a thin bar through which the ribbon is run. The medal contains a cross and the words "With God for the King and Country 1912-1913" and on the reverse side is the words "Macedonia, Epirus, Archipelag."

The other medal contains the picture of King Constantine with the numerals 1913 and on the other is the figure of [illegible] with the dates "[illegible]." This medal is suspended by ribbon through which runs a green stripe indicating that it is for service in the war with Bulgaria.

COAL IS EXCHANGED

Two Big Concerns Acquire Additional Acreage from Each Other.

A coal deal involving nearly [illegible],000 acres has been closed between the Rochester & Pittsburg Coal Company and the Buffalo & Susquehanna Coal & Coke Company, two of the largest operating corporations in the Punxsutawney coal district.

For 2,01[illegible] acres of coal in Jefferson, Clearfield and Armstrong counties the Rochester & Pittsburg company has traded to the Buffalo & Susquehanna company a slightly larger acreage in Indiana county in the White Bush Flats region.

About 1,[illegible]00 acres in Armstrong county which the Buffalo & Susquehanna company had planned to mine through a new opening will now be mined through the Cowanshannock Coal & Coke Company's opening at Numine.

By the deal the Rochester & Pittsburg company has lengthened the life of its Adrian operations four years, its Helvetia mines six years and its Numine workings nearly 20 years. The life of the Sagamore mine of the Buffalo & Susquehanna company has been increased at least 30 years.

The deal has been in the making five years. Both companies are desirous of straightening up their property lines for economical operation.

HIGBEE OUT AGAIN AS A CANDIDATE FOR DISTRICT ATTORNEY

BEATEN IN 1904 CAMPAIGN

Also Ran for State Senator Last Year Until Party Leaders Decided On D. M. Hertzog as the Stronger Man; Counts on Record as Reformer.

The most interesting political development of the campaign from several points of view is the determination of E. C. Higbee to become a candidate for district attorney. Higbee is the only Democrat of prominence who has yet announced his candidacy for anything this year. Owing to the fact that he is law partner of Bruce F. Sterling, official distributor of federal patronage, it is expected Higbee will command the support of what is left of the Democratic organization, although this fact did not prevent him being unceremoniously yanked out of the race for state senator last year when the Sterling crowd came to the conclusion that D. M. Hertzog had a better chance to win.

Higbee expects to gain votes on the strength of his record as a purger of precincts. He was active a year ago in purging alleged phantoms in several Republican districts. It was commented on at the time that particular care was exercised not to disturb any of the phantoms in Democratic districts. Although Judge Umbel struck several hundred names from the voting lists it didn't result in the election of any Democrats and the prediction is made that voters of that party will be scarcer than ever this year. Higbee ran for district attorney in 1904 but was badly beaten by Thomas H. Hudson. There are those familiar with the political situation who declare that he has even a less chance than he had 11 years ago if he is the Democratic candidate.

Lloyd C. Chorpenning has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for district attorney. Chorpenning is popular among the younger members of the bar. It is said in some quarters that Higbee enters the race under a heavy handicap because of the fact that he is Sterling's law partner. Under the Sterling regime the Democracy of Fayette hasn't prospered, although the Sterling family, official and otherwise, has been well taken care of.

In Connellsville the candidates are busy. John Duggan and Terrance M. Luttermore have filed their petitions as candidates for council and John W. McClaren has his petition in circulation as a candidate for school director. James Schell has filed his petition as a candidate for council on the Democratic ticket in South Connellsville borough and Matthew Hart has filed his petition as a Republican candidate for constable in Connellsville township.

William S. Miller has been appointed minority inspector of election in the Seventh Ward, Connellsville, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Fred Rohrer.

HOW WE WON OUT

We Saw the Prize and Grabbed It

Everybody in town knows that we are first in getting the best of everything. Last week we received a letter from Professor Munyon showing [illegible] whereby we could rush his homeopathic remedies direct from his laboratory into our store without losing any of their curative properties. We saw the importance of this offer and immediately sent in our order for a full line of his remedies.

We want to say that we have received a letter from Professor Munyon stating that if anyone bought the remedies and they were not perfectly satisfied with results that we were to return the money. He says: "I want you to specially push the Rheumatism Remedy in order that people may know. Find the hardest cases in town, those that doctors have failed to cure and get them to buy a 25c bottle and if it doesn't relieve stiff and sore joints, pain in the back, side or in any part of the body before one bottle has been used, give the people back their money." This certainly must inspire confidence as everybody knows that Munyon's Homeopathic Remedies are absolutely harmless and millions of bottles are sold every year.

He has also sent us a few hundred packages of his Paw-Paw Laxative Pills and wants us to give them away absolutely free. He says the pills are the best stomach and liver regulator that the world has ever known. They don't scour, they don't gripe. They school the bowels to act naturally and take out of the system all the poisons and matter that irritates the nerves and causes biliousness, headache and general debility.

We are also to give away a four page sheet of music free to everybody who calls. J. C. Moore.—Adv.

FUTURE OF COKE AND PIG.

It does not speak well for the sagacity of the Connellsville merchant coke operators that the iron trade papers which presumably reflect iron trade sentiment, are frankly puzzled over the complacent failure of coke prices to follow iron and steel prices in their emphatic upward movement. Commenting editorially on The Weekly Courier's review of the coke trade last week, The Daily Iron Trade says:

"The Connellsville coke trade is not showing much enthusiasm these days, this in contrast with the generally brighter aspect of the iron and steel trade. Little prompt furnace coke is being sold in other than widely scattered lots and furnaces are not rushing in to the contract branch of the trade. More talk is heard of coke negotiations along the basis of the old-time sliding scale but it is not clear that a larger number than usual of such contracts has been closed. The prompt furnace coke price ranges from $1.50 to $1.60 ovens, the spread traceable to differences in grades. The contract furnace market ranges from $1.75 to $1.80. It seems to be the general impression that Connellsville operators will not contract for the further deliveries under $2, and some even express the hope that some day Connellsville coke will be worth anywhere from $2 to $3 a ton. The foundry branch of the fuel trade continues about unchanged, both as to quotations and to demand but it seems to be the more stable branch of the business.

"Why the Connellsville coke trade should drag along behind the improvement in other lines of iron and steel manufacture and sale, seems to be an unsolved problem. Some observers profess to find an explanation of the regression in the growth of the by-product industry, which has begun to make forward strides in the middle west. Several blast furnaces recently have contracted for by-product ovens and it is said one oven-building concern has contracts on its books for a total of 1,000 ovens of combined capacity. However this by-product theory does not account for the hesitation still noticeable in the Connellsville market. While considerable coke is being made there and is being shipped so that oven yards last week practically were cleared of spot coke, yet the market itself exhibits every sign of depression. It seems to have neither courage for the moment nor hope for the future. It seems to lack come-back, just as a clump of putty lacks elasticity. What is the real factor weighing upon the neck of the Connellsville coke trade is a question that a good many people are interested in seeing answered. No one has answered it yet.

"Shipments last week aggregated about 352,000 tons, an increase of 15,000 tons over the previous week, making it a record for the year so far. This aggregate was about 11,000 tons larger than actual production, which shows that considerable yard coke was shipped from the regions beside the actual production. A few ovens were blown in, but more were blown out in the week, the net result being a loss of 81 ovens from the active list. It would appear, therefore, the week is not far distant when 400,000 tons will be burned and shipped, but this day only can come when the merchant ovens are doing considerably better as to their proportion of activity than they are doing at this time, since now they are operating at 41% of capacity, whereas the furnace ovens are running at 83%. Some coke operators have set as their aim $2.50 ovens, for furnace coke for 1916. Will they get it? If they do will it come in the early part of the year, in the middle of the twelve-month or at the end of it?"

The answer to the concluding inquiry is up to the merchant operators, but there seems to be no unsurmountable difficulty in the way of $2.50 furnace coke for 1916 beginning with the first quarter. The fact that sliding scale contracts were revived this year after having been buried for a long time was undoubtedly due primarily to lack of confidence in the market, which is only another way of stating that the merchant operators lacked confidence in each other's inclination or ability to support the market. The conversion of the furnaces during the spell of hot weather a few weeks ago caused a surplus of coke which contributed in no small degree to keep prices down, but that surplus has been swept up and sold out. The era of cheap spot coke has passed. The coke market is likely to take the bit in its teeth upon the appearance of increased demand and that demand seems to be in sight.

By-product coke is not a factor in the present situation. In the Connellsville region merchant production, which was less than 100,000 tons week with the opening of 1915 has increased to approximately 156,000 tons and is steadily gaining. The by-product output of the present, or the by-product possibilities of the future are unlikely to depress Connellsville coke prices in the face of an expanding demand. The drag in coke prices is not due to by-product ovens. It is a by-product of disunited and distrustful producers.

The merchant furnacemen, it will be recalled, were an unconscionably long time in putting up the price of their pig iron. They jeered at the coke men before they themselves are out of the hollow of the wood. The increasing low prices of pig iron after the steel movement had started upward were caused primarily by a surplus. When the demand for pig iron became greater than the supply the price went up. The congested furnaces which created a coke surplus and kept coke prices weak made the supply of pig iron scarcer in the face of an increasing demand and was probably the indirect cause of the upward impetus in the metal market. The coke trade was sacrificed to the iron trade. Our present advices are that a round dozen idle furnaces are booked to blow in within the coming six weeks. This will add materially to the demand for coke and strengthen the position of the merchant operators for $2.50 contract. At the same time it is not likely to depress the upward trend of the pig iron market.

The experience of the merchant coke operators and the merchant furnacemen who are consumers of Connellsville coke should suggest to them the possibilities of a combination which would include a substantial majority of their number and capacity and make up a big industrial unit able to take care of itself under all market conditions. Such a combination would effectually dispose of the by-product bogey and add to the stability of the iron and steel situation. It would be within the law since it would control neither the coke nor the pig iron market. All it needs is a Moses.

THE NEW INDUSTRIAL EPOCH.

"Steel, the New Industrial Epoch," is the title of a circular letter issued by Renskorf, Lyon & Company of New York City. The circular reviews the steel industry and makes some rather startling deductions, especially as to the earning capacity of the United States Steel Corporation. The opinion is expressed that never have the steel companies been so well prepared to take advantage of improved conditions as they now are. Extensions and new construction during the last three years have added greatly to the productive capacity. Although the stoppage of German commerce has given wide publicity to the dyestuff situation it is believed that the extent to which the steel companies of this country will profit by the sale of so-called coal tar products is not a matter of common knowledge.

With regard to the future the following statements are made: "With bumper crops and improving business, with a certain, although slow return of prosperity to the railroads developments in the steel industry the next year might easily discount the optimism of the irresponsible enthusiast. Assuming maximum production from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1916 on the basis of increased capacity, the Steel Corporation for instance would earn more than $141,000,000 if prices averaged no higher than in 1912. Employing for calculation the price of 1913, the indicated earnings for the same arbitrary period would be approximately $180,000,000.

"The figures are too staggering to be accepted at present in view of the fact that the largest previous earnings amounted to $137,000,000 in 1913. We firmly believe, however, that they will be within the range of sober consideration before another year rolls around, for on the basis of capacity production and rising prices, earnings of $45,000,000 per quarter will be regarded as conservative."

The estimation that a considerable share of the steel prosperity comes from the sale of coal tar products recovered from the by-product ovens in use at the steel plants is given for what it is worth, but no doubt the actual figures will be interesting when they are available. Benzol recovery was brought about by a sudden and pressing war demand which necessarily put prices rather high and profits rather liberal. We have hitherto depended upon Germany for dyes, benzol and other ultimate coking recoveries, but now that we have established plants for their manufacture in this country we will never go back to foreign markets for them, certainly not if our new industries are accorded proper Tariff protection.

The European war has thrown us upon our own resources in a number of lines of manufacture, and when they are developed they should be encouraged. The reason for such encouragement, which in time of peace seemed remote and academic, has been made luminous in time of war.

THE BATTLE FOR BREAD

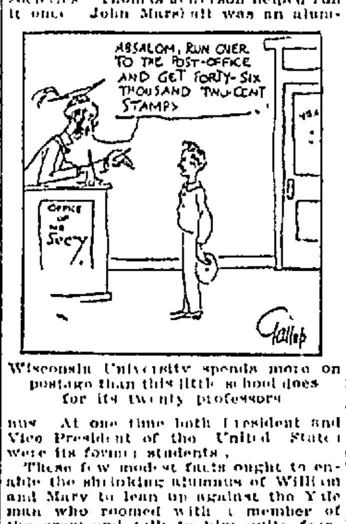

William and Mary

By GEORGE FITCH,
Author of "At Good Old Siwash."

William and Mary College is so small that its student body could jam itself into a University lecture room. A crowd of Greek letter societies in good form could out-yell the whole school and the third scrub football team of Harvard could make its varsity eleven look like a plate of hash. Its college buildings could all be put in the drill hall of the University of Illinois, and Wisconsin University spends more on postage than this little school does for its twenty professors.

However, William and Mary has a few talking points of its own. They do not get into the sporting sections but they are preserved in the encyclopedias and histories and ought to be better known, though they do not run up into the millions in any particular.

William and Mary is the second oldest college in the country. It has the oldest college building in the United States. It has been put out of business by two wars. It has educated four Presidents—Jefferson, Monroe, Harrison and Tyler. It had the biggest college president the world has known—George Washington. It originated the elective and honor systems and the Greek letter societies. Thomas Jefferson helped run it once. John Marshall was an alumnus. At one time both President and Vice President of the United States were its former students.

These few modest facts ought to enable the shrinking alumnus of William and Mary to lean up against the Yale man who roomed with a member of the crew and talk to him quite fearlessly.

William and Mary is located at Williamsburg, Va. Owing to the untimed neighborhood it took seventy-two years to start it, but it finally began business during the Revolution and in the Civil War its whole student body with a few exceptions enlisted in the Confederate army. After the war, there was nothing left of the school but a campus, a foundation and an imposing wad of history. The school was unable to run on the history and closed in 1882, but six years later Virginia came to its rescue. It now has 250 students, gets $25,000 a year from the state, and is as young and vigorous as if it had not been almost fatally masticated by the tooth of time.

William and Mary's main building was built in 1693, has been burned three times, but still has its original walls and is being used today. All brick masons should be required to take a course of study in this building.

SCOTTDALE, Aug. 30.—Quite a number of the members of the family and friends of the Hay-Ringler connection from this place attended the annual reunion which was held at Lanier Park, Ohiople, on Saturday, in spite of the unpromising weather, which gave at least part of the day good in the mountains. From Scottdale there were among those present: H. A. Ringler and family, O. E. Ringler and family, George List and family, James List, J. M. Kennell, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Spranger, Miss Edith Wilson, Miss Frances Stauffer, Bert Ringler, Jesse Tacmas, Mrs. Isaac Henderson and daughter of Hawkeye. It was a general disappointment to many members of the family that the oldest member of the clan, Mrs. Sarah Ringler of Donegal was unable to be present as had been expected. Mrs. Ringler, although 91 years old, has been in remarkable health for that age, until last Friday when she suffered from a light stroke of paralysis, it is reported.

Dr. N. E. Silsley, who had been ill for a couple of weeks past, but who had improved, was taken to the Columbia Hospital, Wilkinsburg, on Friday, to have treatment in anticipation of having an operation within a few days. Dr. O. C. Grub, a classmate of Dr. Silsley and a specialist of Pittsburg, was out on Thursday and advised Dr. Silsley to go to the hospital for further examination and treatment.

SERVICES OVER.

The last of the union services of the churches each Sunday evening during the month of August, when all the evangelical churches of town joined together for their services at that time, was held Sunday evening. As the former ones this was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Dr. I. E. Runk, pastor of the United Brethren Church, was the minister. The choir consisted of W. J. Berkell, Miss Lida Barkell, Miss Lorna Attwood and W. G. Cope, with Miss Frances Cupp as organist. Dr. Runk, in his introductory remarks called attention to the fact that with next Sunday all the churches will go back to their former services, and urged that all take up for the rest of the year the definite aim of preparation for the union evangelistic services which will be held in the tabernacle in the month of January. Committees will be named and the work organized for that time. It is expected that a very large and active meeting will be the result.

He shipped his household goods over the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie railroad on Saturday. Mr. Kooser's nephew, George Fehr, formerly of this vicinity, has been living near Barberton for a number of years.

THE REVIVAL MEETINGS.

Hundreds were turned away from the tabernacle last night. Every seat was taken. The illustrated songs are drawing the crowds. The tabernacle was hard with women at the women's meeting which was held yesterday afternoon. Evangelist Minges spoke on "Rolling Away the Stone."

Last night Rev. Minges preached on ... sermon on the theme "Satan Defeated," taken from the lesson of the temptation of Christ in the wilderness. Just before ... service, baptismal services were conducted by Rev. J. Alex. ...

... Saturday night Rev. Minges preached on the subject "Hell."

... morning the entire company went to the United Brethren Sunday School, where they took charge of the services. There will be no service at the tabernacle tonight as this is the rest night for the evangelistic company. On tomorrow night Rev. Minges will preach on the subject, "Pardon."

PROBE PREACHER'S DEATH

By Associated Press.

GARY, Ind., Aug. 28.—Joseph Kramer, a powder maker, interrogated by the police today in connection with their investigation of the murder of the German pastor, Rev. Edmund Kayser whose body was found near the parsonage in Tolleston last Tuesday night, said two men, one of whom "looked like Kayser," recently approached him with a proposition to blow up the Aetna powder works, where he is employed.

He said he reached an agreement with the two under which he was to get $1,500 for destroying the Aetna plant, but later he decided to tell the police instead.

The Gary police today concentrated their intention on the theory that the pastor came to his death as the result of his pro-German sympathies.

FEAR MORE VIOLENCE.

Unknown Men Shipped Out of Marietta, Ga.

By Associated Press.

MARIETTA, Ga., Aug. 28.—Eight men who did not give satisfactory explanations of their presence here were rounded up last night, placed in a box car on a freight train and sent away. The car was safely guarded until the train left the town limits.

Since Leo M. Frank was lynched near here August 17, several persons whose business in the town was not known have been invited to leave.

These events and the continual receipt of letters threatening various sorts of vengeance for Frank's lynching caused police officials here to increase the number of officers by 15 today.

Favorite Remedy for Diarrhoea.

"About three years ago I had a serious attack of summer complaint. The doctor's medicine failed to benefit me, so I sent for a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy upon the recommendation of one of my neighbors. One dose of it did me more good than all the other medicines I had used. I improved rapidly and in a short time I was well," writes Mrs. May Huggins, Peru, Ind. For sale by all dealers.—Adv.

At the Theatres

SOISSON THEATRE.

"HIS FAVORITE PASTIME."—Chas Chaplin the famous comedian will appear at the Soisson Theatre today in the rollicking comedy "His Favorite Pastime." The Chaplin comedies are all new and the funniest of all. Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are the stars in the sixth episode of "The Broken Coin." Eddie Lyons will make everybody laugh today in the funny Nestor comedy "Lost Three Teeth." Tomorrow the distinguished emotional actress Betty Nansen will appear in the powerful society drama "The Fallen Idol."

COLONIAL THEATRE.

"THE DAWN OF A TOMORROW."—Revolutions in Mexico, wars and rumors of wars have their day but Mary Pickford and the brook of Tennyson go on forever. She is the paramount obsession of the picture seeing populace. The children know her and love her, the shop girls dream about her and try to look like her, millions of society cries over her and the men—well the men think she is just the sweetest little girl that ever wore petticoats. Her greatest hit up to her appearance in Frances Hodgson Burnett's remarkable drama "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," in which she is on at the Colonial Theatre today and tomorrow, was "Tess of the Storm Country," which will be shown here in the near future. She has starred in many other plays too numerous to mention and through the Famous Players Company attained her highest success.

"The Dawn of a Tomorrow" is a drama of love and faith and will produce an unforgettable impression on all who will see her at the Colonial today and tomorrow.

THE TAILLEUR PARIS FAVORS NOW.

Not an ounce of frivolity is there in the Parisienne's street costume these days. Severe tailored distinction is the style-watchword and this severity and distinction are well expressed in a fall tailleur from Bernard. Coat and skirt are of very dark blue gabardine and the belted coat shows the longer line and the lowered waistline now favored. The velvet sailor hat has a tassel of black cord.

CHANGES AT INDIANA

Rush of Students Make New Annex a Necessity.

The unusually large number of students seeking admission to Indiana State Normal School this year made it necessary to add a wing to its main building. This will be 100 by 40 feet and will provide rooms for 66 girls. The annex will cost about $5,000.

Local girls who have to begin or to resume their studies at Indiana when the fall term opens on September 14 will find other improvements have been made. Among the most important is the refurnishing and redecorating of the big dining hall.

Surprise Party at Everson

A surprise party was tendered Mrs Austin Hyde Thursday at her home in Everson. The day was spent at various amusements and at noon dinner was served. Guests from Everson, Pennsville, Connellsville, Dawson and Vanderbilt attended.

They went ashore together, and so the same hotel at Southampton for the night. Candlelight found the chance pair with their feet under the same heavy Victorian mahogany, devouring cold beef, ham and pickles as phlegmatically as commercial travelers who had never been off the island in their lives. Yet surely Cazalet was less depressed than he had been before landing; the old English ale in a pewter tankard even elicited a few of those anecdotes and pignant comparisons in which his conversation was at its best. It was at its worst on general questions, or on concrete topics not introduced by himself; and into this category, perhaps not unnaturally, fell such further particulars of the Thames Valley mystery as were to be found in an evening paper at the inn. They included a fragmentary report of the adjourned inquest, and the actual offer of such a reward, by the dead man's firm, for the apprehension of his murderer, as made Toye's eyes glisten in his sagacious head.

But Cazalet, though he had skimmed the many-headed column before sitting down to supper, flatly declined to discuss the tragedy his first night ashore.

CHAPTER III.

In the Train.

Discussion was inevitable on the way up to town next morning. The two strange friends, planted opposite each other in the first-class smoker, traveled inland simultaneously engrossed in a copious report of the previous day's proceedings at the coroner's court.

The medical evidence was valuable only as tracing the fatal blow to some such weapon as the missing truncheon; the butler's evidence explained that the dinner hour was seven thirty, that, not five minutes before, he had seen his master come downstairs and enter the library, where, at seven fifty-five, on going to ask if he had heard the gong, he had obtained no answer but found the door locked on the inside, that he had then hastened round by the garden, and in through the French window, to discover the deceased gentleman lying in his blood.

The head gardener, who lived in the lodge, had sworn to having seen a bare-headed man rush past his windows and out of the gates about the same hour, as he knew by the sounding of the gong up at the house, they often heard it at the lodge, in warm weather when the windows were open, and the gardener swore that he himself had heard it on this occasion.

The footman appeared to have been less positive as to the time of a telephone call he had answered, thought it was between four and five, but remembered the conversation very well. The gentleman had asked whether Mr. Craven was at home, had been told that he was out motoring, asked when he would be back, told he couldn't say, but before dinner some time, and what name should be given, whereupon the gentleman had rung off without answering. The footman thought he was a gentleman, from the way he spoke. But apparently the police had not yet succeeded in tracing the call.

"Is it a difficult thing to do?" asked Cazalet, touching on this last point early in the discussion, which even he showed no wish to avoid this morning. He had dropped his paper, to find that Toye had already dropped his, and was reading at the flying English fields with thoughtful puckers about his somber eyes.

"If you ask me," he replied, "I should like to know what wasn't difficult connected with the telephone system in this country. Why, you don't have a system, and that's all there is to it. But it's not at that end they'll put the snit on their man."

"Which end will it be, then?"

"The river end. That hat, or cap. Do you see what the gardener says about the man who ran out bare-headed? If he went and left his hat or his cap behind him, that should be good enough in the long run. It's the very worst thing you can leave. Ever hear of Franz Muller?"

Cazalet had not heard of that important notoriety, nor did his ignorance appear to trouble him at all, but it was becoming more and more clear that Toye took an almost unhealthy interest in the theory and practice of violent crime.

"Franz Muller," he continued, "left his hat behind him, only that and nothing more, but it brought him to the gallows even though he got over to the other side first. He made the mistake of taking a slow steamer, and that's just about the one mistake they never did make at Scotland Yard. Give them a nice, long, plain sailing steeplechase and they get there by bedtime—wireless or no wireless!"

But Cazalet was in no mind to discuss other crimes, old or new; and he closed the digression by asserting somewhat roundly that neither hat nor cap had been left behind in the only case that interested him.

"Don't be too sure," said Toye. "Even Scotland Yard doesn't show all its hand at once. In the first inquiry that comes along. They don't give out any description of the man that ran away, but you bet it's being circulated around every police office in the United Kingdom."

Cazalet said they would give it out fast enough if they had it to give. By the way, he was surprised to see that the head gardener was the same who had been at Uplands in his father's time; he must be getting an old man, and no doubt shakier on points of detail than he would be likely to admit. Cazalet instanced the alleged hearing of the gong as in itself an unconvincing statement. It was well over a hundred yards from the gates to the house, and there were no windows to open in the hall where the gong would be rung.

"I've dreamed of the old spot so often," he said at length. "I'm not thinking of the night before last—I meant in the bush—and now to think of a thing like this happening, there, in the old governor's den, of all places!"

"Seems like a kind of poetic justice," said Hilton Toye.

"It does. It is!" cried Cazalet, fetching moist yet fiery eyes in from the fields. "I said to you the other night that Henry Craven never was a white man, and I won't unsay it now. Nobody may ever know what he's done to bring this upon him, but those who really know the man, and suffered for it, can guess the kind of thing!"

"Exactly," murmured Toye, as though he had just said as much himself. His dark eyes twinkled with deliberation and debate. "How long is it, by the way, that they gave that clerk and friend of yours?"

"You mean Scruton? What on earth made you think of him?"

"Talking of those who suffered for being the dead man's friends, I guess," said Toye. "Was it fourteen years?"

"That was it."

"But I guess fourteen doesn't mean fourteen, ordinarily, if a prisoner behaves himself?"

"A little more than ten."

"Then Scruton may be out now?"

"Just."

Toye nodded with detestable aplomb. "That gives you something to chew on," said he. "Of course, I don't say he's our man—"

"I should think you didn't!" cried Cazalet, white to the lips with sudden fury.

Toye looked disconcerted and distressed, but at the same time frankly puzzled. He apologized none the less readily, with almost ingenuous courtesy and fullness, but he ended by explaining himself in a single sentence, and that told more than the rest of his straightforward eloquence put together.

"If a man had done you down like that, wouldn't you want to kill him the very moment you came out, Cazalet?"

The creature of impulse was off at a tangent. "I'd forgive him if he did, it, too!" he exclaimed. "I'd move heaven and earth to save him, guilty, or not guilty. Wouldn't you in my place?"

"I don't know," said Hilton Toye. "It depends on the place you're in, I guess!" And the keen dark eyes came drilling into Cazalet's skull like augers.

"I thought I told you," he explained impatiently. "We were in the office together; he was good to me, winked at the business hours I was inclined to keep, let me down lighter in every way than I deserved. You may say it was part of his game. But I take people as I find them. And then, as I told you, Scruton was ten thousand times more sinned against than sinning."

"Are you sure? If you knew it at the time—"

"I didn't. I told you so the last night."

"Well, I mustn't ask questions," said Hilton Toye, and began folding up his newspaper with even more than his usual deliberation.

"Oh, I'll tell you!" cried Cazalet ungraciously. "It's my own fault for telling you so much. It was in a letter from Scruton himself that I heard the whole thing. I'd written to him—toward the end—suggesting things. He managed to get an answer through that would never have passed the prison authorities. And—and that's why I came home just when I did," concluded Cazalet; "that's why I didn't wait till after shearing. He's been through about enough, and I've had more luck than I deserved. I meant to take him back with me, to keep the books on our station, if you want to know!" The brusk voice trembled.

Toye let his newspaper slide to the floor. "But that was fine!" he exclaimed simply. "That's as fine an action as I've heard of in a long time."

"If it comes off," said Cazalet in a gloomy voice.

"Don't you worry. It'll come off. Is he out yet, for sure? I mean, do you know that he is?"

"Scruton? Yes—since you press it—he wrote to tell me that he was coming out even sooner than he expected."

"Then he can stop out for me," said Hilton Toye. "I guess I'm not running for that reward!"

CHAPTER IV.

Down the River.

At Waterloo the two men parted, with a fair exchange of fitting speeches, none of which rang really false. And yet Cazalet found himself emphatically unable to make any plans at all for the next few days, also, he seemed in two minds now about a Jermyn Street hotel previously mentioned as his immediate destination, and his step was indubitably lighter as he went off first of all to the hoop line, to make sure of some train or other that he might have to take before the day was out.

In the event he did not take that train or any other; for the new miracle of the new traffic, the new smell of the motorless streets, and the newer joys of the newest of new taxicabs, all worked together and so swiftly upon Cazalet's organism that he had a little colloquy with his smart young driver instead of paying him in Jermyn Street. He nearly did pay him off, and with something more than his usual impetuosity, as either a liar or a fool with no sense of time or space.

"But that's as quick as the train, my good fellow!" blustered Cazalet.

"Quicker," said the smart young fellow without dipping his cigarette. "If you were going by the old Southwestern!"

The very man, and especially the manners that made or marred him, was entirely new to Cazalet as a product of the old country. But he had come from the bush, and he felt as though he might have been back there but for the smell of petrol and the cry of the motor horn from end to end of those teeming gullies of bricks and mortar.

He had accompanied his baggage just as far as the bureau of the Jermyn Street hotel. Any room they liked, and he would be back some time before midnight; that was his card, they could enter his name for themselves. He departed, pipe in mouth, open knife in one hand, plug tobacco in the other; and remarks were passed in Jermyn Street as the taxi bounced out west in ballast.

But indeed it was too fine a morning to waste another minute indoors, even to change one's clothes, if Cazalet had possessed any better than the ones he wore and did not rather glory in his rude attire. He was simply and comfortably drunk, with the delight of being back. He had never dreamed of its getting into his head like this; at the time he did not realize that it had. That was the beauty of his bout. He knew well enough what he was doing and seeing, but inwardly he was literally blind. Yesterday was left behind and forgotten like the Albert Memorial, and to-morrow was still as distant as the sea, if there were such things as to-morrow and the sea.

Meanwhile what vivid miles of dazzling life, what a subtle autumn flavor in the air; how cool in the shadows, how warm in the sun; what a sparkling old river it was, to be sure; and yet, if those weren't the first of the autumn tints on the trees in Castleman.

There went a funeral, on its way to Mortlake! The taxi overhauled it at a callous speed. Cazalet just had time to tear off his great soft hat. It was actually the first funeral he had seen since his own father's; no wonder his radiance suffered a brief eclipse. But in another moment he was out on Barnes' Common.

It had been the bicycle age when he went away; now it was the motor age, and the novelty and contrast were endless to a simple mind under the influence of forgotten yet increasingly familiar scenes. But nothing was lost on Cazalet that great morning; even a milk-float entranced him, itself enchanted, with its tail can turned to gold and silver in the sun. But now he was on all but holy ground. It was not so holy with those infernal electric trams; still he knew every inch of it; and now, thank goodness, he was off the lines at last.

"Slower!" he shouted to his smart young man. He could not say that no notice was taken of the command. But a wrought-iron gate on the left, with a covered way leading up to the house was past and gone in a veritable twinkling.

Five or six minutes later the smart young man was driving really slowly along a narrow road between patent wealth and blatant semi-gentility; on the left good grounds, shaded by cedar and chestnut, and on the right a row of hideous little houses, as pretentious as any that ever let for forty pounds within forty minutes of Waterloo.

"This can't be it!" shouted Cazalet. "It can't be here—stop! Stop! I tell you!"

A young woman had appeared in one of the overpowering wooden porticoes, two or three swinking strides were bringing her down the silly little path to the wicket gate with the idiotic nurse, there was no time to open it before Cazalet blundered up, and shot his hand across to get a grasp as firm and friendly as he gave.

"Blanche!"

"Sweep!"

They were their two nursery names, here no improvement on the proper monosyllable, and it's a rather dubious token of pristine proclivities. But out both came as if they were children still, and children who had been just long enough apart to start with a good honest mutual stare.

"You aren't a bit altered," declared the man of thirty-three, with a note not entirely tactful in his admiring voice. But his old chum only laughed.

"Fiddle!" she cried. "But you're not altered enough Sweep, I'm disappointed in you. Where's your beard?"

"I had it off the other day. I always meant to," he explained, "before the end of the voyage. I wasn't going to land like a wild man of the woods, you know!"

"Weren't you! I call it mean."

Her scrutiny became severe, but softened again at the sight of his clutched wide-awake and curiously characterless, shapeless suit.

"You may well look!" he cried, delighted that she should. "They're awful old duds, I know, but you would think them a wonder if you saw where they came from—"

"I'm sorry to interrupt," said Blanche, laughing, "but there's your taxi ticking up twopence every quarter of an hour, and I can't let it go on without warning you. Where have you come from?"

He told her with a grin, was roundly reprimanded for his extravagance, but brazened it out by giving the smart young man a sovereign before her eyes. After that, she said he had better come in before the neighbors came out and mobbed him for a millionaire. And he followed her indoors and upstairs, into a little new den crowded with some of the big old things he could remember in a very different setting. But if the room was small it had a balcony that was hardly any smaller, on top of that unduly imposing porch, and out there, overlooking the lane grounds opposite, were basket chairs and a table, hot with the Indian summer sun.

"I hope you are not shocked at my abode," said Blanche. "I'm afraid I can't help it if you are. It's just big enough for Martha and me; you remember old Martha, don't you? You'll have to come and see her, but she'll be horribly disappointed about your beard!"

Coming through the room, stopping to greet a picture and a bookcase (filling a wall each) as old friends, Cazalet had descried a photograph of himself with that appendage. He had threatened to take the beastly thing away, and Blanche had told him he had better not. But it did not occur to Cazalet that it was the photograph to which Hilton Toye had referred, or that Toye must have been in this very room to see it. In these few hours he had forgotten the man's existence, at least in so far as it associated itself with Blanche Macnair.

"The others all wanted me to live near them,' she continued, "but as no two of them are in the same county it would have meant a caravan. Besides, I wasn't going to be transplanted at my age. Here one has everybody one ever knew, except those who escape by emigrating, simply at one's mercy on a bicycle. There's more golf and tennis than I can find time to play; and I still keep the old boat in the old boat house at Littleford, because it hasn't let or sold yet, I'm sorry to say."

"So I saw as I passed," said Cazalet. "That hit me hard!"

"The place being empty hits me harder," rejoined the last of the Macnairs. "It's going down in value every day like all the other property about here, except this sort. Mind where you throw that match, Sweep! I don't want you to set fire to my pampas-grass. It's the only tree I've got!"

Cazalet laughed, she was making him laugh quite often. But the pampas-grass, like the rest of the ridiculous little garden in front, was obscured if not overhung by the balcony on which they sat. And the subject seemed one to change.

"It was simply glorious coming down," he said. "I wouldn't swap that three-quarters of an hour for a bale of wool. You can't think how every mortal thing on the way appealed to me. The only blot was a funeral at Barnes; it seemed such a sin to be buried on a day like this, and a fellow like me coming home to enjoy himself!"

He had turned grave, but not graver than at the actual moment coming down. Indeed, he was simply coming down again, for her benefit and his own, without an ulterior trouble until Blanche took him up with a long face of her own.

"We've had a funeral hero. I suppose you know?"

"Yes. I know."

Her chair creaked as she leaned forward with an enthusiastic solicitude that would have made her shriek if she had seen herself; but it had no such effect on Cazalet.

"I wonder who can have done it!"

"So do the police, and they don't look much like finding out!"

"It must have been for his watch and money, don't you think? And yet they say he had so many one about!" Cazalet kept silence; but she thought he winced. "Of course it must have been the man who ran out of the drive," she concluded hastily. "Where were you when it happened, Sweep?"

Somewhat unwisely he was recalling the Machiavellian movements of the Kaiser Fritz, when at the first mention of the vessel's name he was firmly heckled.

"Sweep, you don't mean to say you came by a German steamer?"

"I do. It was the first going, and why should I waste a week? Besides, you can generally get a cabin to yourself on the German line."

"So that's why you're here before the end of the month," said Blanche. "Well, I call it most unpatriotic; but the cabin to yourself was certainly some excuse."

"That reminds me!" he exclaimed. "I hadn't it to myself all the way; there was another fellow in with me from Genoa; and the last night on board it came out that he knew you!"

"Who can it have been?"

"Toye, his name was. Hilton Toye."

"An American man! Oh, but I know him very well," said Blanche in a tone both strained and cordial. "He's great fun, Mr. Toye, with his delightful Americanisms, and the perfectly delightful way he says them!"

Cazalet puckered like the primitive man he was, when taken at all by surprise; and that anybody, much less Blanche, should think Toye, of all people, either "delightful" or "great fun" was certainly a surprise to him, if it was nothing else. Of course it was nothing else, to his immediate knowledge; still, he was rather ready to think that Blanche was blushing, but forgot, if indeed he had been in a fit state to see it at the time, that she had paid himself the same high compliment across the gate. On the whole, it may be said that Cazalet was ruffled without feeling seriously disturbed as to the essential issue which alone leaped to his mind.

"Where did you meet the fellow?" he inquired, with the suitable admixture of confidence and amusement.

"In the first instance, at Engelberg."

"Engelberg! Where's that?"

"Only one of those places in Switzerland where everybody goes nowadays for what they call winter sports."

She was not even smiling at his arrogant ignorance; she was merely explaining one geographical point and another of general information. A close observer might have thought her almost anxious not to identify herself too closely with a popular craze.

"I dare say you mentioned it," said Cazalet, but rather as though he was wondering why she had not.

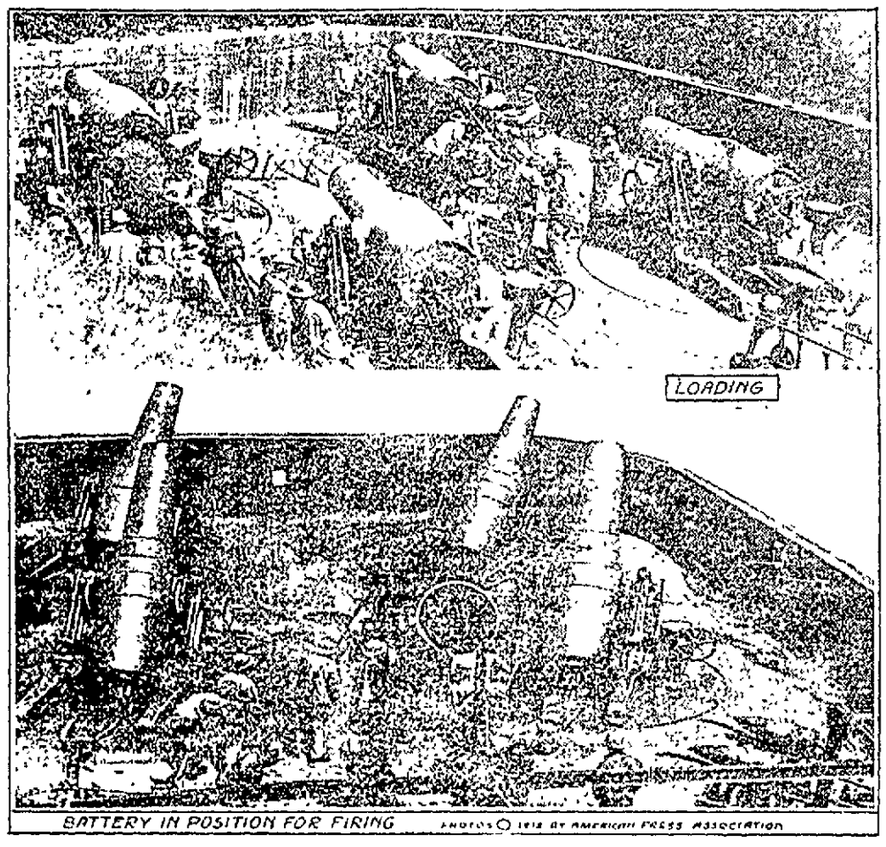

"I dare say I didn't! Everything won't go into an annual letter. It was the winter before last—I went out with Hetty and her husband."

MOISTURE CONTENT OF COAL DUST NOT EXPLOSIVE GAUGE

Tests by the Bureau of Mines Explode an Established Theory.

WATER DOESN'T MAKE IT SAFE

Volatile Matter Contained in Samples Apparently Affected Inflammability, But as Yet Exact Reason for Dust Explosions Has Not Been Learned.

A coal dust with a high percentage of moisture is not necessarily inexplodable though it has been frequently been asserted that it is. The tests of the United States Bureau of Mines have shown that a certain coal dust from Utah with nearly 15 per cent of moisture will explode with a rise in pressure far greater than that obtained on exploding some of the coal dusts of West Virginia containing less than 1 per cent of moisture. The water in the Utah coal does not appear to make it safe. That, at least, is the testimony of experiments on a laboratory scale.

In the Utah coal mentioned there is much volatile matter, but in that from West Virginia far less, and the great quantity of bituminous matter in the first coal appears to overcome the immunity from inflammation which might otherwise result from the presence of uncombined moisture.

But all immature coals contain not only much water, but also much volatile matter, so it is not safe to suggest that immature coals are safe, and on the other hand, there is abundant evidence that while mature coals are not easily inflammable in laboratory experiments and do not generate high pressures, yet in actual tests, when dusts are detonated, the dusts from such mature coal can produce most disastrous effects, for being able to generate the maximum heat, they assure the greatest possible expansion and the highest pressures.

The safety of Montana coal mines from explosions has been ascribed to the presence of moisture in the coal, and it is true that the water content of the samples of coal that have been investigated is high, while inflammability is abnormally low, but while the moisture is possibly a cause it is not the sole reason for the safety of the dust. Apparently its nonflammability is not an important cause either, for even when ground fine for inflammability tests the dust generates little pressure on inflammation by an electric current.

The two Montana dusts tested by the Bureau of Mines were reasonably low in ash, and there is not a hint of the reason why they should be so resistant to inflammation. Until more is known and until the value of the tests of inflammation as a true index of explosibility is proved, experts are inclined to admit they do not know why one dust explodes with ease and violence and another dust with difficulty and without energy.

As further evidence of the explosibility of substances containing moisture it may be added that no difficulty has been found in exploding the dusts of grain, by intention or by accident. These dust all appear to contain from 6 to 10 per cent of moisture, and some also as much as 15 per cent of ash. But these impurities do not prevent such dusts from the sudden propagation of flame.

PASSES UP COAL ORDER

Million Tons Involved, but There Were Other Considerations.

Coal producers would be glad to get foreign business if it could be had on the basis of payment in dollars free on board cars at tidewater on day of delivery. Because this is not practicable a coal company has found it unwise to accept a certain million ton order from abroad. If the company had accepted the order and shipped the coal, it might be that the value of the shipment would be eaten up by demurrage charges while waiting for a ship to carry the cargo. If the delay were prolonged and coal and other products were going forward, terminal facilities would soon be congested and the railroads would be compelled to place an embargo on all shipments until the freight blockade was lifted. Then would come the matter of payment, assuming that the cargoes were finally cleared.

If payment were tendered in drafts on foreign banking centers, the coal merchant would be forced to sell these drafts for what he could get, or his capital would soon be tied up in foreign exchange, which would be unavailable for use in meeting payrolls and other costs of operation. If he sold his foreign drafts at the market price, that would mean a discount that would eat into profits, and at the rate at which foreign exchange has been declining it might mean an actual loss on the transaction.

"The Store With the New Styles First"

Just a Few of the New Fall Waists Have Arrived

—And it is only a few when we stop to consider the many many pretty new Fall creations we have bought (and are expecting to arrive most any day) to make our Autumn showing the talk of the buying public. These few, though, will give a good idea of how fascinating and supremely stylish our new showing will be. We have a small assortment of beautiful new rainbow stripes and the most popular solid colors, in values up to $6.50, but as an introduction to the new season, we invite especial attention to one great special.

A Few Very Fashionable Plaid Waists to Sell for $1.98

—Plaids are good this Autumn—very good. This group includes alluring combinations of blue and red, black, blue and white, and others. Made with full length sleeves and comfortable roll collars. Sizes are 36 to 44. Some very pretty lace waists are included at this price.

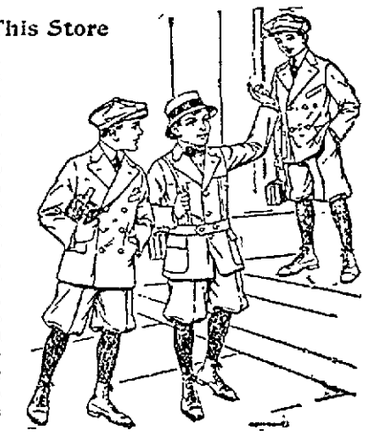

Every Day More Pupils are Enrolling in Our Fall School of Dress Making

IF YOU HAVE NEVER SEWED, if you used to sew but have neglected it recently, or even if you are an accomplished seamstress today, you can benefit by the instruction that these classes will afford you. Classes begin September Thirteenth with a very able instructress in charge, who will teach all the newest and most approved ideas known to the art of dressmaking. Only $3.00 for the full course of six lessons, during which one dress can be made complete. All materials and findings used by pupils must be purchased at this store. Instructions will be given in fitting and in the use of Pictorial Review Patterns. Unfortunately, we can accommodate only one hundred pupils, so if you would be one of them, it behooves you to enroll today at the pattern counter.

Send Your Boy Off to School in a Sensible, Serviceable, School Suit

Chosen at This Store

—For of course you will wish to select it from the widest variety, the best materials, the greatest values to be had. Our showing this season is one of the very best we have ever had, and includes suitable models for every boy, whether you pay much or little. These suits have both style and good looks, but it is their supreme wearing qualities upon which we pride ourselves most.

Sensible Prices

—Are also a help in your selection. At $4.00, $5.00, $6.50 and $7.50, we have an exceedingly attractive display of new plaids, checks, brown mixtures, greys and blues. An extra fine value at $5.00. Some suits have two pairs of pants. See these today.

Elk Junior $5

—Is a guaranteed all-wool suit of non-shrinkable material. Designed especially for school wear with many exclusive features to make it more wear-resisting and to save mother much mending. Many pretty little patterns to select from. May be had with two pairs of pants for $7.50.

Each Day Sees the Arrival of More Fashionable Fall Suits for Men —And in the play of many colors, brown has the leading part. Greys, blues and fancy plaids are all good. Coats are cut a trifle longer with wide lapels and narrow shoulders. Some with patch pockets; some plain and vertical, with or without vent. Wright-Metzler's new clothing for Fall 1915 is not high priced either, as our large and splendid showing at $10.00 to $30.00 will easily show. Even if you aren't ready to buy, we'd like to show you these new goods.

School Time Again Finds Us Ready With a Fine Showing of Boy's School Shoes

—And we have used extreme care to buy only shoes that we know will give a maximum of wear. They're neat and good looking, but it is of the service we wish to speak most. Durable Gun Metal and Storm Calf are the leathers, made into lace or button models. Built for the comfort and freedom of growing feet as well as for wear, as the broad toes and low wide heels will testify. The little gents' sizes are moderately priced at $1.75 and more; the boys' sizes at $2.25 and more.
